It takes all kinds of different minds

Although neurodivergent students have many strengths and talents, their school day can be a negative experience. Most neurodivergent students work very hard to overcome the challenges and obstacles caused by their learning differences. There is also a stigma and many negative stereotypes and misconceptions about students who have special educational needs. As a consequence, school can be a demoralising and frustrating experience that negatively effects their confidence and self-esteem.

We want to change this by encouraging schools to take part in Neurodiversity Celebration Week, a week during which the many advantages and strengths of being neurodiverse are recognised and celebrated.

Please join us in creating a more inclusive, supportive and understanding environment for SEND students by signing up to participate in Neurodiversity Celebration Week, which will take place on 16 March to 20 March 2020.

In order to register, please go to: www.Neurodiversity-Celebration-Week.com.

Below are some examples of how to take part in Neurodiversity Celebration Week.

- Have a neurodiversity-themed assembly
- Put up positive posters of famous neurodiverse individuals
- Invite neurodiverse parents and individuals in your community to speak
